AI at Work prioritizes work that critically examines how AI technologies—machine learning, natural language processing, computer vision, robotics, and intelligent automation—are transforming workplaces, while highlighting approaches that balance technological advancement with human-centered values. Topics of interest include human-machine collaboration, workforce transitions, AI-ready cultures, skill development, and the ethics of intelligent technologies.

By examining AI as both a technical and social phenomenon, AI at Work amplifies interdisciplinary scholarship that helps organizations harness AI's potential while mitigating its risks. We welcome diverse methodological approaches and submissions from researchers and practitioners across organizational psychology, computer science, business management, ethics, the social sciences, and related fields.
